PREFACE.

There would be little reason for this book if, in practice, shorthand writers were given time enough to draw each character. But as the main purpose of phonography is to admit of verbatim writing, the reporter, in his endeavor to keep up with a rapid speaker, makes many of the characters if not incorrectly at least so hurriedly as to lose accurate resemblance to their original form. Not infrequently some of them are made wrong—quite unlike what he would have made had he not been in a hurry.

So it is that the real measure of stenographic skill lies more in the ability to read bad notes than in writing good ones; or if they can not be read, the expert, by the exercise of good judgment in reconstruction or substitution, can generally produce a satisfactory transcript. But the inexpert, when “stuck,” is often helpless, and ignominiously fails.

The purpose of this book is to enable shorthand writers to read badly written notes.

By the method here used of classifying outlines that look alike, and translating them into all probable English words into which they can be translated, the reporter should be able to find, under the appropriate head, the character he intended to make and the word it stands for.

The working vocabulary of the ordinary speaker consists of less than 2000 words. This book contains approximately 13,000 words, represented by about 3200 outlines.

I have endeavored to avoid cumbering this list with words in the past tense requiring merely halving of the stem to add final t or d; or with plural forms (requiring only the addition of s), unless the outlines represent other words, as, “ticket,” the outline for which would likewise be the past tense of "talk" and "tuck"; "reduce," the outline for which would also represent the plural forms of "road," "rod," etc.

For reasons that will be obvious to the experienced reporter no attempt has been made to place the outlines in "position." Line position, like shading, affords a slight aid in translation: the chief dependence of the stenographer must always be in outline and in context. And this book is designed for practical reporters, not for mere learners or phonographic draftsmen. While sufficient allowance has been made for the possibility of writing slightly wrong forms under pressure of high speed (see the words and letters in parentheses), it is yet assumed that the writer knows the fundamentals of his system and writes by some sort of rule. This book can hardly be expected to aid in tracing an outline beginning with hook-r when the writer has made hook-l, or has written a circle on the wrong side of a straight letter. But if the character is fundamentally right, it should be easily traced, and the required word found. Thus the possibilities of a character that looks like p n-hook is exhausted in the nineteen outlines pn, pnt, pntr, pshn, bn, bnd, bndr, tn, snt, tntr, dn, dnd, dndr, dshn, rn, rnt, sn, snt, sshn, representing more than a hundred words.

Of course I have aimed at perfection, but am conscious that I have not achieved it in this first attempt at gathering Similar Outlines. Still an experience of more than thirty years as a shorthand teacher and reporter justifies me in offering to the profession this fruit of my experience, imperfect tho it may be.

Boston, January 1, 1911,

WILLIAM HICKOX.

Rules for Phrasing

1. The first word of a phrase should begin in its normal position to the line of writing.

2. Phrase only words that have a natural connection, i. e., that occur frequently together in speech.

3. Phrase only words that admit of a sharp angle at the point of joining, or can be easily distinguished by shading, or by curves running in opposite directions.

4. Medially and finally words that are phrased in the present tense should not be phrased in the past when the forms for both are alike; as I can, not I could (unless followed by not); I may, not I might; I find, not I found; I think, not I thought; I send, not I sent; I don't, not I didn't.

Many words having the same outline can be translated by the fact of phrasing or not. For example, if the reporter, following the above rule, phrase words in the present tense and never in the past, when the outlines are similar, then by negative inference he can translate them when phrased or written separately.

Only by long experience can the reporter be certain that words that make a good joining occur together with sufficient frequency to justify phrasing. When in doubt, do not phrase. It is better not to phrase enough than to phrase too much.

The following list of words to phrase or not to phrase will be found helpful:

PHRASE	DO NOT PHRASE
To do	To it
At least.....	At last
To whom.....	Of whom
Or else.....	Or less
Spite of.....	In spite of (It conflicts with "instead of")
Any time.....	In time-no time
Any one.....	No one
In case.....	In excess
See.....	Say (following "can not," or "do not")
In the case.....	In the course (unless the is omitted and other words follow, as "in (the) course of a few days,"
By which (the tick is made up)
As we have.....	As if, alone
Me-my	Him (except in "I told him")
Which	Much medially, (except in "as much as possible" and "inasmuch as")
City (after "your" and "this")	State (after "your" and "this")
He-stroke medially or finally, only after "which"	Of one (It conflicts with "between")

PHRASE	DO NOT PHRASE
This-these	Those , except when "who" follows
	Thus , except when followed by "far"
Will ,.....	Well , except in "as well as" and phrases ending with "be well," as "it may be well," "it would be well" etc.
Every-for	Over , except in "over the country," "over the matter," "over (the) world," and "overhead" (over-d)
Of finally only in "at the end of," "by reason of" and "on account of"	And initially or the-tick finally when there is a possibility of conflict with an initial or final hook, as "and it" or "can the"
	Not initially when it conflicts with un prefix, as "not able to" (unable to) "not necessary" (unnecessary)
Each with "month", "year" and f-hook only, "as each of them"	As-has-is-not alone
	Should not alone
	On with words of-to are phrased with
	Do on words be is phrased with

Vocalizing, and the Affix "Fulness"

Dot-ing should be written after contractions whose consonant forms would be so changed by writing stroke-ing as to conflict with other words, as advertising, railroading, coming.

Half-length straight letters (not grammalogues) without hooks or circles should generally be voweled, as pit, bad, dead, act, caught, goad, etched, aged.

Always vowel aid, age, defence, devise-ce (e), expand, expansion (e). They conflict with do, large, advise-ce, explained, explanation.

Vowel "field" not "ville" as the terminal of towns.

Vowel uncommon words whose outlines are not distinctive. Only the first vowel is usually needed.

Disjoin ns for final "fulness," as in usefulness, thought- (not thank) fulness, faithfulness, bashfulness, fruitfulness (join u), fretfulness, truthfulness, playfulness, artfulness, cheerfulness, forgetfulness, watchfulness, wakefulness, youthfulness.

After half-length p-b, t-d, ns is disjoined only for "ness," as aptness, badness, straightness.
